The old barge Plymouth started from Norfolk,

Va., last Tuesday morning, in tow. The big ocean tug L. Luckenbuch was towing the Corsica, Milton and Plymouth, all laden with coal, to New-York.

not able to weather the terrible gale which they encountered off Earnegat on Thursday. At 5:40 foremast of the Corsica was snapped square off near the deck, and mast and headgear were carried overboard. The steering gear of the Corsica was thrown out of order, and the vessel floundered about in the trough of the sea. The barges were steered in a southeasterly course and managed to ride the seas. Then the roaring waters burst over the port the old hull blows that shook every rib and timber. The barge began to leak and the pumps were usaless

The crew of the Luckenbach saw the signal of dis tress as it fluttered from the mast and was torn to ribbons by the gale. The captain of the tug fearer

o cut loose from the disabled Corsica and go to the assistance of the Plymouth. It looked like sacrificing the eight men on the Corsica to save Captain Wyman, als wife and the three seamen on the Plymouth

Finally the captain of the Luckenbych ordered his mate to cut the hawser connecting the tug and the Corsica. It was then impossible to east it off.

Freed from her tow the Luckenbach went along side the Plymouth just as the burge was sinking

One seaman of the Plymouth was dragged on boars

but he was too weak and exhausted to save himself

Another seaman was drowned before any aid could

Just before the Plymouth began to settle, Mrs

Wyman turned to her husband and said: "Well, it the barge founders I have $100 in the pocket of my cloak, which will keep us until you can get another command." She went into the deckhouse and reurned with her cloak wrapped about her. Then the barge began to go down amid swirling eddies, and the fury of the storm raged about the sinking vessel.

Captain Wyman clong to a tacch with one arm and supported his wife with the other. He held Mrs

Wyman until a great wave carried her away from supported his wife with the other. He heat also Wyman until a great wave carried her away from his nerveless arms. She gave one shriek, and then her voice was drowned in the fary of the storm. She was caught up by the rushing seas and horne far astern, where she disappeared from view.

The crew of the Lurkeman threw a line to Captain Wyman, which he caught and was firnly dragged on board the tag. The dory of the tag could not be used in the work of resule, as it had been smashed by the force of the waves.

The sinch hawser, which connected the Plymouth and the Milton snapped like twire when the Plymouth went down. The Milton was leaking badly, and the Luckemanch stood by her. The water was prapped from her hold, and she was taken it tow by the tag Pilot, from Philadelphia. The disabled Corska was brought to this port by the Luckemanch vesterday. Captain Wyman is heart-broken over the death of his wife. He trembled with emotion when he told the story yesterday, and broke down and wept tike a child. His wife accompanied their parents. The children had asked to go with their father on his last trip, but he would not take them on account of the roughtess of the weathet.

Captain Wyman ran up the ensign union down.

It was with a heavy heart that Captain Wyman master of the barge Flymouth returned yesterday to his home in Brooklyn. As he thought of the many joyous home-comings when he and his wife came

Not for many years has a week of the "after" sesson been so fraught with incident. The great interest of society centred in the nuptials of Miss Cornelia Martin and the Earl of Craven, which from no desire of the young pair developed into the reigning sensation of the hour. This wedding formed the theme of conversation at luncheon and dinner table throughout society, and various were the stories told, and naturally there were many exaggerations. With so much talk it is not to be wondered at that columns in the dally papers were devoted to the description of the ceremony and subsequent reception. There positively remains nothing to be told in addition to what has been said, save that one of the best authorities, a near relative of the bride, said that Lerd Craven did not wish nor ask for settlement, that being given by the bride's mother, who has an shandance of this world's goods, part of which she has most generously settled upon her daughter, whose title would be only an empty satisfaction without the fortune with which to keep it up. Unfortunately the great notoriety given to the affairs of the Bradley Martins during the last month led to an unconventional visit two days after the wedding. Their visitor or visitors came early and unbidden, and took away with them souver irs of their call in a highhanded manner not to be commended in any society. These light-fingered gentry no doubt expected to wedding presents galere, which days before had been placed far from the reach of the covetous.

was the unbidden quests who forced their way into Grace Church on Tuestay, and their free way of helping themselves to the floral decorations after the guests had left the church, though not styled burglary, was not far removed. One woman was seen leaving the church with such an armful of flowers that she was forced to hold her change between her teeth. The selfishness of such people deprived the sick in several hospitals of the beering sight of the beautiful flowers so lavishly The hospitality shown to the Duke and Duchess of Veragua has done ample credit to New-York and her citations. Public-spirited people and private individuals have done all in their power to make their visit a memorable one, and it is a pleasure to recount that the reception at the Waldorf on Wednesday was without bluster or ostentation, and as feautifully arranged as any private reception. There was all evidence of harmony among the committee, and as far as could be judged no one person seemed to assume undue importance. Everything that was brilliant and refined in the cosmopolitan society of will give New-York was represented, and many women who years ago were bright and particular lights of the hionable world withdrew from semi-seclusion to bener the occasion. The Duchess and her daughter underwent the fatigue of the reception with con-summate grace and good nature, and they heard not a few words of welcome in their native tongue. The beautiful mass of fruits displayed in the buffet-room was afterward presented to the Duchess, who in turn isked that it might be divided among several hospitals in the city, specifying some which she had It is altogether probable that the ball of Thursday will be a brilliant affair, and it would not be a bad idea for the committee in charge to invite a number of women noted for their tenuty and fine attire to surround the Duchess and her daughter on the platform at the east end of the amphitheatre. first private visit paid by the ducal pair was to the house of Mrs. Eugene Kelly, on Monday afternoen, where they met some of the immediate members of Mrs. Kelly's family, among them her daughte and granddaughter, Mrs. and Miss Beales, both of whom speak Spanish exceedingly well, and T. kept away some of her expected guests.

The entertainment at Mrs. Stevens's was comparatively small. The Mayor was not there, nor were other city officials, or even Ward McAllister. The majority of the gowns were white, embroidered in gold or silver or relieved with colored velvet sleeves. The Duchess were white combined heavily with wreaths of nowers in colors. Her daughter was in Heber Lishop escorted the Duchess to supper. who did not wear a crown, though some of the Amerlean women present did. Mrs. Henry Stonne looked particularly handsome in white brocade edged with with pink velvet sleeves, and Mrs. Forbes Leith was in the new red violet shade. Mrs. L. K. Wilmerding and Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting were both in white. Mrs. William Evans Rogers was in black brocade. Mrs. Eradley-Martin wore a striking gown of white brocade with applied blue velvet in garlands and knots and a dog collar of diamonds. Mrs. Adrian Iselin, jr., looked handsome in blue-gray velvet and Mrs. Cruger was in white, Miss Murphy, as usual, in black. Mrs. Frederick Sheldon and Mrs. Kinnfeutt were both in yellow brocade, Mrs. Kinnfeutt's gown having some rare old point lace. Mrs. John Jacob Astor looked exceedingly pretty in black, and the hostess were black and white striped silk.

Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes, who have been some months in Mexico, sailed on the Majestic on Wednes day. Lady Sykes is a sister of George Cavendish Bentinck, who married Miss Livingston, of New-York, the twin sister of Mrs. Ogden Mills. She inberits much of that wit and brilliancy which have made her mother one of the most notable women in London society. Since this, her second visit to New-York period of nineteen years, she has written a most flattering article for an English publication on society here and elsewhere in the United States, but particularly of New-York. Mr. and Mrs. John E. Cowdin, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick H. Allen, and Miss Adele Grant were also passengers on the same steam ship. Mr. and Mrs. Allen will visit the latter's Mr. and Mrs. Allen will mother, the Duchess de Dino, in Paris.

Men of rank and title do not always look to New-York for a bride. News comes from San Francisco of the engagement of Miss Cella Tobin, a daughter Richard Tobin, who left his children a handsome fortune, to Richard Granville Hare, Viscount Ennismore, who paid a flying visit to New-York about six Lord Ennismore is the eldest son of the Earl of Listowell, and a lieutenant in the 3d Battalion, Royal Scots. HORACE WATERS DEAD. Horace Waters, the well-known menulacturer of planes, THE BUSINESS PROSPECT ERIGHT-RAILEDADS LOOK FOR PAIR PROFITS. Philadelphia, April 22.-In an interview to-day President George E. Roberts, of the Pennsylvania Railroad, talked freely regarding the business ou ook for this year, saying among other things: The prospect for this year is moderately fair. will, however, to a large extent depend on how far the financial disturbances of this country are going to affect commercial activities. The ruinous results that came to nearly all the large transportation in terests of the country on account of the extremel low rates that prevailed in 1-92, and still continue in the early months of 1803, have clearly demon-strated the fact that there is a point to which competition can be carried which is beneficial neither naturally results in reduced dividends, if not in mo serious results. At the present time the railway in terests are all making strenuous efforts to secure better rates for the present year, which certainly ca be done without in any way seriously interferin with the mitting or manufacturing industries of this

"The financial difficulties which are now disturbing us must be attributed largely, if not entirely, to the excess of imports over exports. Notwithstanding the fact that the transportation companies did all they could to stimulate export by lew rates on all classes of freight, still the prices of our exporting commodities were too high for export. This has resulted in throw ing the balance of imports largely against this country 'The World's Fair should tend to stimulate the movement of traffic throughout the country, and if the passenger rates are properly maintained between the different lines, they ought to resp some benefits from the liberal expenditures they have made to care for this business."

In speaking of the recent from and steel troubles especially that of the Pennsylvania Steel Company he said: "I cannot but believe that when the Penn he said: "I cannot be proved that was the conservation as the pioneer of the steel industries in this country, is properly supplied with capital, it will, under the good executive management which it has always had, proved the first proved the capable of making fair returns on all its investments."

EDWIN BOOTH'S SERIOUS CONDITION.

Contradictory reports were circulated all day yes terday in regard to the condition of Edwin Booth, who is dangerously sick at the Players' Club. At on hour it was declared that he was dying, at another he was much better, again that he was growing steadily worse and yet again that he might in a few days or weeks be as well as before his recent attack. In the effort to sift out the truth from all this con tradiction it appeared that Mr. Booth's condition was still serious in the last degree, that an unfavorable or even fatal turn in the case would not be unex pected at any time, but that in the evening he was omewhat more comfortable, and his condition for the time being a little more favorable. Any considerable hope entertained last night would, how ever, probably have been without ground.

It was admitted at the Players' last night that an attempt had been made for the first day or so after Mr. Booth's attack to convey the impression that the case was not so serious as it was known to be, and that it was now in reality of the gravest character. The state of attairs which was freely admitted to exist at the club last night was, in fact, just what was announced in The Tribune Yester day morning. With always a ray of hope the danger is constantly great, and the actor may die at almost is constantly great, and the actor may use any hour. Dr. Fremont smith, a brother-in-daw any hour, Booth's son-in-haw, Mr. Broth's son-in-haw, Mr. Grossman, held a co-sultation with Dr. st. Clair Smith hast evening The patient's temperature was then above normal, at was rising. A little later it was reported that M Booth was sleeping comfortably and that the Lahange detected seemed to be favorable. At a lahour last night Dr. St. Clair Smith announced the ie was still sleeping; that his temperature was formal, and that he would without doubt live through the night.
